Son-in-Law Settles.

The clerks were told that her son in-law had been duly notified and that he would settle the bill. Of course it was supposed this was the end of th whole affair, but the amusing par ing over, people began to come back to exchange goods, etc. Early in the orenoon in walked the woman with the bag, and taking the two pairs of hose out she boldly handed them to the clerk and told her they were the wrong check and denied having sold them to take the stockings from the counter The woman, however, insisted tha she had purchased them from the clerk. All the clerk could do was to send them to the exchange desk where the "customer" was allowed to exchange them for a larger size.

Another woman was seen at anothe nto her bag, and this time the clerk holdly accused her of the theft.
